Description:

Structural: Very simple, small 1½-story house (29 rows of cobbles), long side facing road, two windows on lower level. On the right gable end (south) a rustic rambling wooden addition obscured the entire area below the lower sill of the 6-over-6 paned window in the gable. Rear had similar gable window (4-over-4) with a door or window set below to the left of it (cannot discern details, photo shows only the corner of a lintel). Frieze consisted of little more than a narrow piece of molding.

Masonry: Multi-colored, sized, and shaped field cobbles laid in somewhat wavy rows to accommodate odd-sized cobbles. On the gable end some courses had rounded horizontal mortar joints, with straight vertical joints; no particular attention to mortar joints on the side facing the road, with stones sometimes appearing to have been pressed into already applied sheet of mortar. Cobbles were set all the way to grade. No quoins, instead wooden pilasters; lintels and sills were of wood.

Background Story

No information was found about Andrew I Green, or when George Paine acquired the cobblestone house, when additions were made, and so forth.

George and Lillian Paine lived at the property until his death at age 84 in 1959 after which time Lillian went to live with her daughter in Wellsville, PA. She died in 1963. In 1974 the long vacant property was transferred to Ernest Kunes who owned the adjacent cobblestone house immediately to its north.

Per conversation on 9/5/2013 with Junius Town Historian, Ernie Brownell, in 1984 Kunes sold the entire parcel—including both cobblestone structures—to John Nearpass. They ultimately had this cobblestone house torn down because of the tax burden and liability issues by virtue of vagrancy by local youths.

Neighbor Doris Wolf recalls in 8/10/2013 email: "When we moved here in 1979, there was a small falling down cobblestone structure on the little strip of land south of the Nearpass cobblestone house. I do not know what it had been. I would guess it was an outbuilding for the Nearpass home next door."
