It cannot be confirmed that this church was a cobblestone structure. If it was, it would have been the only one in the city (metro). Cobblestone buildings were usually built in small clusters in the same area because a mason could only lay 3 or 4 courses at a time before letting the mortar set for a few days before starting back up again. Working on more than one at a time minimized idle time. The nearest cobblestone structures were in an area considered the outskirts of the city located on what is now Culver Rd. Both were built by mason, Alonzo Bradley. This church, however, took four years to build; records cite financial issues. So, if it really was a cobblestone church, as opposed to a stone church, it would have been a challenge finding a cobblestone mason to construct it piecemeal in isolation from other projects.

HISTORY SHEET

General Information

Few records exist about the church from this early time period. Although there is no description of this original church structure, it was probably small because records tell that it was replaced to accommodate a growing congregation. The replacement was of brick, and that too was eventually replaced with the structure there today.

Catalyst for this research was Cynthia Howk's email 4/3/2024:

"Click on this 1952 'D & C' article written at the time of the death of Rev. Ernest Heyl, age 80, who was pastor of Zion Lutheran Church, 70 Grove St/corner of Stillson St. for 41 years (1900-'41). <https://democratandchronicle.newspapers.com/image/137747279/?terms=rev%20hey%20l&match=1> ... The current building at 70 Grove St. - former Zion Church/closed 1960 - is of brick construction and dates from the mid-1800s. Here's 1917 photo (<https://mcnygenealogy.com/pictures/3900/pic-4026.htm>). ... The most intriguing item in this 1952 article is citation that Zion Lutheran church, founded 1833 & the city's oldest Lutheran congregation, is described as having originally been a cobblestone building! Note: the original name of this congregation was 'German Evangelical Lutheran Church.' The current building at 70 Grove St. - former Zion Church/closed 1960 - is of brick construction and dates from the mid-1800s. Here's 1917 photo (<https://mcnygenealogy.com/pictures/3900/pic-4026.htm>). After the church closed, the building was the headquarters of the Jewish War Veterans, 1960-'90s. In the 1990s, it was renovated as "Halo Apartments," which it remains, today.

"Zion Church's Century Mark To Be Noted

... This church served a group of early settlers who looked to her for special comfort. In a strange country of unfamiliar ways and language, their weekday as well as their religious interests centered more or less about this church. From that time until now when it has numbered musical stars and those promising to rise among the younger parishioners, it has ministered to an older element in German, a young group in English. ...

Records of this, the first Lutheran church, are so scanty that its history is incomplete. There were services here as early as 1831, three years before Rochester became a city. There is a definite account of the Lutheran congregation deciding to erect its own building in 1834, which data makes possible the knowledge of the first centennial. The lot on which the first house of worship was erected was where the present one stands, at Stilton and Grove Streets. Some time in May of that year the cornerstone of a cobblestone church was laid. Lack of funds delayed work, but the Synod came to the rescue with a loan. This edifice was dedicated Dec. 14, 1838. ...

In a pamphlet issued for the centennial, the Rev. Walter Krumwiede, minister of Grace Church, has a history of Zion Church. In 1848 the Rev. George J Kempe succeeded the Rev. Mr. Michelfelder. He remained until 1842. While he was serving a new church was built in 1851 to accommodate the growing congregation. ...

The church met a disaster in the great fire of April 13, 1908 that swept through Temple B'rith Kodesh and seriously damaged Zion's edifice as well as other buildings."

"Two April 13ths: Eastman's Patent ... Big Fire, By Arch Merrill

Tomorrow, April 13, will be the anniversary of two dissimilar important events in Rochester history. One bolsters the superstitious that 13 is an unlucky number. The other contradicts it.

On April 13, 1880, George Eastman obtained a United States patent on his photographic dry plate process. It was a lucky date for him and for Rochester.

On April 13, 1909 a gale-spread half million dollar fire swept a large section of downtown Rochester. ...

On the afternoon of April 13, 1909, which a 40-mile-an-hour wind raked Rochester, fire was discovered in the Kenning Building at the northeast corner of Main and Gibbs Streets. The gale spread the sparks over 13 streets to the northward. New fires kept springing up. Soon the blaze was out of control. It destroyed Temple B'rith Kodesh in Gibbs Street and the First Reformed Church at Harrison and Oregon Streets. It severely damaged the Lutheran Zion Church at Grove and Stilton but was confined to the roof of St. Peter's Presbyterian Church in Grove Street. ..."
