HOUSE TOUR SLATED

Many of our readers will be familiar with "The inkers Dam", which is located just north of the Vilge of Albion on the west side of Route 98. A ecorative sign hangs out in front indicating that The Tinkers Dam" is a shop which sells primitive ntiques and Folk Art. This attractive cobblestone ome which was built in the 1830s is made of eldstone. Anyone who passes by can not help but dmire the setting before it, a quaint front yard with ts of pretty vegetation.

But this has not always been the case. Believe it not, the accompanying photo shows "The Tink-'s Dam" as it appeared forty years ago. Not a retty sight! The picture is from the files of the Cobestone Resource Center at Childs. I think we can asily say this picture is worth a thousand words hen compared to the beautiful home it is today. In ct, I deliberately picked out the photo which nows the residence in its worst dilapidated condion. I did this because nothing is more graphic an a knowledge of before and after. Wonderful ansformations can occur with a little imagination nd foresight. Ugliness can be turned into beauty rough preservation and appropriate restoration. hen we speak of preservation and restoration of d buildings, we are ultimately concerned with estetics which is what it's all about. Oscar Wilde rote: "Aesthetics are higher than ethics, they elong to a more spiritual sphere. Even the devepment of a color sense in the individual is more portant than knowing the difference between ght and wrong." On the surface this is a bold and rhaps controversial statement. However, it nds to drive a point home by which we should be ore aware. Aesthetics. "The Tinkers Dam" is a ase in point where aesthetics have won. It's a ase where beauty and charm through numan guiance have defeated ugliness and ruin. Right over rong!

I have deliberately not included an after shot. nis, you must see for yourself on the Cobblesne Tour of homes which is scheduled for Saturay, June 3, 1-5 P.M. Tickets may be purchased at day beginning at 11 A.M. either at the Cobestone Museum in Childs or the Pullman emorial Universalist Church in Albion, Eight historic houses including "The Tinkers Dam", will be on this self-guided tour which is all about aesthetics.

In 1982 Virginia Kildoo, her daughter, Gretchen Sepik and her husband, Walt Jakubowski moved to the cobblestone house now known as "The Tinkers Dam." "Ginny" and Gretchen deal in folk art and primitives. Surely their knowledge of aesthetics has enhanced the visual quality of this landmark which also serves as living quarters for them.

It was however, the late Ben Weilhammer who rescued the house from ruin in the early 1950s. A fire in 1939 badly damaged the rear part of the house after which it stood vacant for over a decade. Fortunately it was saved. Otherwise a unique dwelling would have been lost. Several patterns of cobblestone appear on the outer walls of the house. The south and front are small stones neatly laid in rows with a strip of herringbone pattern between the lintels over the second story windows. The north wall however, consists of larger stones laid in the depressed hexagonal design or dish pattern. No doubt these were all collected from the adjoining fields when this was built for a farm house over 150 years ago. And yes, the mason or masons who erected this house believed in the importance of aesthetics for they left behind a legacy we call cobblestone.
